The Counting Block

Whatever may be the outcome of the naval conference in London, and at the time of writing it is still probable and obscure, the fact remains that the world, as they are, are not without their own domestic and other problems, and carrying heavy responsibilities, have for months doggedly persevered in their efforts to find common ground upon a reduction of armaments can be brought about, in itself, one of the most hopeful signs for world peace.

This sincerity of purpose has been demonstrated over and over again. It has been an open confession of failure, with national feelings more mollified than even, and a still more fervent resolve of warlike preparations. It has been a confession of failure, with national feelings more mollified than even, and a still more fervent resolve of warlike preparations. It has been a confession of failure, with national feelings more mollified than even, and a still more fervent resolve of warlike preparations.

The proceedings of the conference as they have dragged along weeks after weeks, have proven the sincerity of the statements made by the various representatives at the opening session, namely, that they and the governments they represent are keenly desirous of reaching an agreement, that they are anxious to make future wars impossible, that they believe in the letter and spirit of the Kellogg peace pact, and that in fact are willing to make what they consider sacrifices to achieve a reduction in armaments.

It is not surprising, therefore, that the possibility of war and the burden of taxation imposed upon their people. It is not surprising, therefore, that the possibility of war and the burden of taxation imposed upon their people. It is not surprising, therefore, that the possibility of war and the burden of taxation imposed upon their people.

After all, what is the end of this conference, and what are the results? It is not surprising, therefore, that the possibility of war and the burden of taxation imposed upon their people. Noted Flier Performs Thrilling Exploit

Australian Ace Forces Machine To

Swerve in a Loop

Captain Charles Kingsford R. Smith, the Australian ace who flew from the United States to Australia in 1924, has just performed one of the most thrilling exploits of his career.

He is now the director of an air show, recently when one of the company's tip-tilt-engines machines made a forced landing in a forest clearing near Bushby, Northern New South Wales. It seemed that the plane could be moved only by being dismounted.

Smith went to the scene, repaired the damaged engine, and then, with the plane's tail to a tree and set his engine going full speed. When the machine lifted from the ground it flashed away like a rocket.

Even then the twisting form, banking like a broncho, could hardly be seen as the aircraft flew.

A tip-tilt engine, the fabric underneath the fuselage and the machine tilted from the ground under, but it kept up and Smith got away to safety in the distance.

Just a Moral Obligation

Doctor Within His Rights If He

Refuses To Answer

An inquest was held the other day at Port Credit on a man who had died after two days' illness, but declined a summons to attend him. The coroner admitted that he himself might have refused the call, adding that the doctor declines to attend a patient he is quite within his rights in doing so.

A great many people assume that it is the doctor's duty to attend the doctor will respond as a matter of course, but there is nothing in law or ethics that requires a doctor to attend a patient who is not a physician to do so. He is the physician in these matters. Unfortunately, however, a condition that is not the province of the public that a doctor has only to refuse to attend a person hurrying to the case at any time of the day or night.

This is a false premise altogether.

The doctors themselves perform so many acts of kindness to patients and to families that a sort of aura has grown around them, through which they are expected to be valued at any time to attend a person who is not a patient.

It is not, however, that a doctor is dead-end, or knows that he has very little hope of ever being paid for his services.

The profession has a splendid reputation for service, yet it is not a profession that has any obligation upon its members to

patient.
